

LUKE ZAMPERINI

Luke Zamperini is the son of Louis Zamperini, one of World War II's most well-known prisoners of war and hero of the 1936 Olympics in Berlin. Louis Zamperini is the subject of Laura Hillenbrand's latest book, Unbroken: A World War II Story of Survival, Resilience, and Redemption. This book has repeatedly been in the number one position on The New York Times Bestseller list.

A feature film based on the book Unbroken will be released Christmas Day 2014. The film was directed by Angelina Jolie. Ms. Jolie began fighting for an opportunity to direct Louis' story after reading Laura Hillenbrand's book. Ms. Jolie has called Louis a "true hero and a man of immense humanity, faith and courage."

Luke has accompanied his Father to hundreds of speaking engagements spanning nearly 50 years. He is thoroughly versed in every aspect of Louis' incredible story of bravery and survival. His father's accounts of his struggle as a POW fighting for his life were Luke's bedtime stories growing up, and now he is honored to have the opportunity to watch these stories influence the lives of others.

When Luke Zamperini speaks to audiences about his father, he adds a unique perspective. Luke focuses on how the discipline of athletics, scouting, and education prepared Louis to survive his incredible ordeal at sea, and would subsequently help him to endure cruelty and humiliation as a prisoner of war. He stresses that it was Louis' preparedness that would equip him for his countless ordeals.

Luke identifies key incidents and concepts in his father's life that have shaped and molded his own character, compelled him into a life of service, and led him to a career in the field of emergency preparedness.

Luke Zamperini is the Chief Inspector and Public Information Officer for the City of Los Angeles Department of Building and Safety. He specializes in employee training and disaster preparedness.

Luke is also a musician, an avid golfer, and a Bible teacher. He resides in southern California with his wife and his son, Louis' only grandchild.

Louis Zamperini passed away on July 2, 2014. Luke is fully honored and prepared to continue carrying the torch of his Fathers' legacy.